THE WORLD THIS WEEK

By ROBERT PATTERSON

Lightning in the Pacific

In this day of blitzkrieg war, it is a wise nation that prepares for the lightning to strike in that quarter from which it is least expected. While anxious eyes are focused today on the earth-shaking struggle across the Atlantic, warning flashes of lightning are flickering over the South Pacific. That jewelled chain of islands, the Dutch East Indies, which first beckoned to wealth-seeking explorers centuries ago, beckons today more appealingly than ever before to that Pacific nation which aspires to supreme overlordship of the Far East—Japan. To gain a free and undivided hand for this new imperial adventure, Japan has been earnestely negotiating with Chiang-Kai-Shek in the hope of bringing the war in China to an early conclusion. Nippon's spokesmen are voicing, in increasingly urgent language, the need of taking the East Indies under "temporary control"—her control. Meanwhile, though the war games are long since completed, the mighty battlewagons of the U. S. fleet have been ordered to maintain their vigil at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. While thoughts are turned to the fields of Flanders and the English isles, it may well be that the lightning of most fateful consequence to this country will strike in the distant reaches of the Pacific.

"United We Stand"

The anvil of Mars forges weapons of hate, but the hammer blows on that anvil are indirectly forging strong bonds of solidarity and friendship in this hemisphere. News from below the Rio Grande and from South America gives clear evidence that, more than at any time since the Monroe Doctrine was first formulated over a century ago, the 21 Latin-American republics are firm and determined in their resolve to prevent any European nation from gaining a powerful foothold in their midst, either through Trojan horse tactics or other means. The once deep-seated distrust of the Yankee Colossus of the North is disappearing in the face of a sterner reality—that the fate of this western hemisphere and the maintenance of its peace will depend on how wholeheartedly the nations of North and South America subscribe to the principle, "United we stand, divided we fall!" Europe today is strewn with the wreckage of nations who, through fear, short sightedness or stupidity, preferred to stand alone rather than together. That the countries of this hemisphere are determined not to repeat that disastrous course of disunity is one reason why Pan-American cooperation is becoming daily more of a reality and less a Utopian hope.

150,000 Pilots

President Roosevelt's plan for 50,000 war planes calls for more than 50,000 pilots. The magnitude of the air armament program alone is such that a call for 50,000 planes will require the train-

Hyde Brothers To Open New Subdivision Here

Hyde Brothers' Park is a new subdivision in Campbell now being conditioned prior to sale of lots. This new tract is on the east side of South First street from the Campbell Water company property to the studio of Otis Hyde, and is part of the former Hyde dry yard.

Eight large lots have been surveyed and five feet has been deeded to the county to widen the street from 45 to 50 feet. The street will be paved, walks and curbing laid and trees planted.

No lots will be sold except for the building of homes at once or in the very near future.

The company will erect houses for sale or help purchasers to build. The houses will be modern in every way and of a style in keeping with the homes on Alice avenue, which will make another attractive addition to Campbell.

The strip of ground between the rear of the lots and the Southern Pacific right of way has been reserved for the use of the Water company.

The intersection of Rincon avenue and First street has been improved by a gift of ground from the Water company property, which cut off the point and made possible a round corner, which the county paved.

New Unit Added To Dehydrator

The Campbell Cooperative dehydrator is to be enlarged by the addition of a new unit housing four tunnels which will be built on the former Dunham property on the west side of South Central and on a vacant lot adjoining both of which now belong to the company.

G. K. Shrader stated that plans are being rushed and construction will be under way at an early date, of the $8000 building.

The company was organized in 1937, the scond cooperative of its kind in the state, with a membership of 45. Almost 3000 tons of green prunes were dried that season. The following year two more tunnels were added as there was such a heavy crop, and even so part of the tonnage was farmed out to handle all the crop of members, some 3900 tons.

Twelve new members have been added this year, which brings the total to 98, whose combined crops are estimated at about 4000 tons green.

Directors of the plant are Stanley Smith, chairman; David Sanders, secretary, Robert Scholz, Albert N. Lantz and Mervyn S. Keesling.

"After the Ball Is Over" . . . Comes The Clean Up

The Junior-Senior Prom, the most beautiful dance ever put on at Campbell high school, was far from being over when the doors closed at 1 o'clock May 30.

The next morning a committee of juniors and teachers began the task of cleaning up the gym, moving out and taking home a hundred potted plants was only the first job. Tearing down the 40x25 foot lattice work partition was the next. Then the task of rolling up more than two miles of crepe paper began and kept about 30 workers busy for almost two hours. The 350 tinseled stars also had to come off the field of blue gauze around the hundreds of feet of the gym wall.

Although the members of the committee had a lot of work to do they also had a quantity of ice cream and cake to "clean up," and this was one job in which every one was willing to contribute his share of the help.

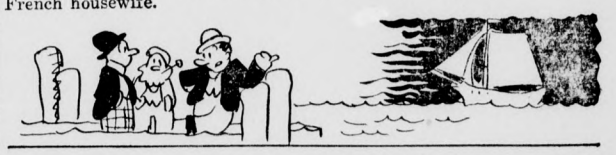
A Tribute to a Thrifty Race

By IRVIN S. COBB

IT IS said that there are no garbage collectors in France, the reason for this being that nothing is ever thrown away by the canny French housewife.



But in the matter of individual thrift the Scotch are not far behind, if at all.

An old Liverpool pilot professed to be able to tell the home port of any incoming vessel within a reasonable distance by what seamen still call "the cut of her jib," meaning thereby her general appearance.

To test his powers an onlooker called his attention to a ship coming up the Mersey in the far distance.

The pilot gazed long and earnestly, and eventually pronounced her an Aberdeen boat. A chorus of surprised voices inquired how he knew.

"No seagulls following her!" he said.

WATCH THAT MATCH!

This is the season when the Fire Demon comes forth from his wintry lair, eager to ravage beautiful forest areas, hunting grounds and pasture lands, leaving behind rootless, blackened slopes to invite floods, waste and erosion.

The Fire Demon takes a very recognizable shape. He lurks in every burnt match tossd away unbroken, in every smoldering campfire left un-extinguished, in every burn-off left improperly protected. His greatest ally is carelessness.

Of 4730 forest fires which occurred during the major part of the season in California last year, 4219 were man made — sorry tribute to the damage done by smokers, campers, hunters and brush burners whose carelessness destroyed nearly half a million acres of forest land and killed thousands of game animals, birds and fish.

These acts of thoughtlessness in 1939 made barren, scarred lands of at least 12 of the state's scenic areas, and did narly one million dollars' damage.

California as a state is the poorer for it, and so are her outdoor vacationers who are nw deprived f enjoyments that would otherwise be theirs. Let all forest users determine this year to fight fire with thoughtfulness, remembering that a carelessly thrown match or inadequately damped fire may cause irreparable loss.

With vigilance, we can fight and conquer the Fire Demon!

FLAG DAY

The nation celebrates Flag Day on June 14—the day on which, 163 years ago, the Continental Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes under which this country fought its battle for independence to a victorious climax.

Not only did these United States fight for independence as a nation, they fought also to establish a government under which freedom and certain inalienable rights might be secured for all people. This was a higher ideal by far than any nation had ever before aspired to, and there were not a few, in Europe as well as on these shores, who foretold early and swift disaster to a country which so boldly cast off the trappings of Old World traditions, customs, beliefs, and championed a government dedicated, not to the service of any class or caste, but to the welfare of all persons.

The skeptical prophets have proved overwhelmingly wrong. In the more than a century and a half since America's flag was first unfurled in the embattled days of the Revolutionary War monarchies have risen and fallen, kings have been dethroned, titanic social changes have given birth to new nations and swept others into oblivion, yet steadfast as then, the Stars and Stripes still wave proudly over this land of the free.

Not a miracle but the wisdom of the Founding Fathers — in fashioning a government which, with freedom as its touchstone, could peaceably adjust itself to change—created a government which has outlasted all others.

These are the reasons why we can pledge allegiance this June 14 to those self-same Stars and Stripes which, on June 14, 1777, inspired a nation to struggle, pray and sacrifice much, in the undying cause of liberty.

" SENIOR CLASS MEMBERS . . . !"

It is commencement time again and all over the United States girls are trying on new, long dresses and boys are admiring double-breasted navy blue suits. For in spite of wars and preparations for wars, the classes of 1940 are making their bows.

The Commencement Day speaker comes from miles away to deliver a message of congratulation and exhortation to these boys and girls, sitting in young dignity and beauty on the platform for relatives and friends to see as well as honor.

But what shall he say, this spring of 1940 when the world is in a paroxysm of war and no one dares to predict what lies ahead? Shall he remind his listeners of the seriousness of life and warn them that soon they will be expected to take responsible places in their communities; the opportunities that lie before him and the greatness of our country and remond them how fortunate they are to have been born Americans?

This fateful spring of 1940 there is no reason to remind even the most frivolous member of a graduating class that life is real and life is earnest. They read the papers and know what is happening to millions of their contemporaries. Every thoughtful boy and girl in this great land must realize that whatever happens, life for them is not going to be carefree or undemanding. And for the greatness of the United States and the advantage of being born an American that is only too self-evident these days!

Let the Commencement Day orator of 1940 speak simply and honestly of these old American ideal which once again we realize must be cherished. Let him speak words of encouragement and remind them that we are to work together as a nation, honestly and with fairness to everyone concerned, without minimizing the difficulties that lie ahead but facing them squarely. Then perhaps the future of the class of 1940 is no less bright than was the future of the classes that graduated in those springtimes of the simler nineteen-twenties.

SWORD OF SCIENCE

Nine thousand persons died from cancer in California last year. Of this number who fell victim to the disease which, in its later stages still fabbles the best minds of science, fully one-half could have been saved IF—the symptoms had been recognized and proper treatment given early!

This was the declaration of medical experts last week as California joined with other states in the annual fund raising drive to help save lives from cancer. Though cancer comes close to holding the post of public health enemy No. 1, a valiant fight waged by science and aided by increasing public knowledge, is forcing the foe into a steady retreat.

Admittedly, today's science, as Paul de Kruif, noted author and bacteriologist said last week, "is a double-edged sword. The knowledge in men's heads works both to heal and to hurt. If the sword could be made to swing in one direction only, what lasting good might be done for the human race."

In warring on cancer and other diseases which maim, cripple, and destroy life, science has clearly unsheathed its sword to slay man's enemies and not man himself. Here is a battle deserving of everyone's support.

The FARMERS CORNER

by RALPH H. TAYLOR
Executive Secretary Agricultural Council of California

California farm organizations, which had the foresight and courage to warn the state against the spread of Communism and seditious activities long before the apt term "Fifth Column," came into being—and which were bitterly condemned for even suggesting such a thing—have achieved belated vindication during recent weeks.

Overseas, one liberty-loving nation after another has foundered on "Fifth Column" treachery, sold out by enemies who bored from within.

And here in California, the report of the assembly committee on subversive activities, which was rendered during the closing days of the special session of the state legislature, is a clarion call to arms against the same forces and influences which sought to terrorize farming communities and incite class violence.

That committee, headed by Assemblyman Sam Yorty of Los Angeles, a crusading liberal—who fortunately discovered that many well-intentioned liberals were being sucked into cleverly-disguised Communist organizations and who had the courage and honesty to ferret out the truth and make it public—rendered a report which electrified the legislature and which has already brought action on several fronts to protect California from the enemies within its gates.

"There is conclusive evidence of the stark reality of the 'Fifth Column' in California," the committee reported.

"Americans already have delayed too long in facing the problem which these 'Fifth Columns' have created. We must not continue to make the mistake of being apathetic and tolerant toward their treasonable activities. If we do, our inexcusable apathy and misguided tolerance will eventually be discovered among the tools used to destroy our government, our constitution and our freedom.

The recommendations of the Yorty report are interesting, not alone because they highlight the problem and means of coping with it, but also because they are recommendations, for the most part, which farm organizations have made for several years past.

They are as follows:

Undertake immediately a thorough investigation of all subversive activities in California. (After the report was rendered, the legislature appropriated $2500 to permit the Yorty committee to make a further investigation.)

Enact laws, both federal and state, to force leftwing propagandists and undercover party operators into the open. (This column recently recommended that Communists, voting the Communist ticket but hiding their registration, be driven into the open by a requirement that any political party must have a registration equaling 3 per cent of the vote at the preceding general election.)

POLITICAL PARADE

By CLEM WHITAKER

A hammer and tongs battle, with no quarter asked and none given, is rapidly taking shape in legislative districts throughout the state, as Governor Olson and members of the bi-partisan economy bloc in the state legislature prepare for a show-down at the polls on bitterly controverted issues of the past two years.

With June 22 as the deadline for filing candidacy petitions with the various county clerks, Olson lieutenants are busily scouring the state in an effort to put a complete slate of candidates in the field against legislators on the Governor's "purge" list.

Groups opposed to Governor Olson's tax program, on the other hand, have launched a counter-blitzkrieg on legislators who voted for new taxes, including a number of the Governor's staunchest supporters.

The outcome of the battle, which will be fought out in a hundred legislative districts, stretching from El Centro to Yreka, is likely to determine the course of state government for years to come, according to political analysts. The economy bloc, while safely in the majority in the Senate, holds only a narrow vote-margin in the Assembly. And if any appreciable number of legislators who made the battle against new taxes are defeated, legislative leaders have indicated they will interpret the vote as a mandate to spend, instead of save—and will act accordingly!

Governor Olson is equally on the spot, however, for having started a "purge," he must either win vindication at the polls or bow to the will of the legislature.

The Governor's heaviest attack, he has indicated, will be on the following Democratic assemblymen who joined forces with Republican legislators to form the economy bloc and oppose any and all tax increases: Speaker Gordon Garland, Tulare; Rodney L. Turner, Delano; Earl D. Desmond and Chester Gannon, Sacramento; Seth Millington, Gridley; Clinton J. Fulcher, Modoc county; Jeanette Daley, San Diego; Sam Yorty and Jack Tenney, both of Los Angeles, and Clyde A. Watson of Orange.

The counter attack of civic groups and taxpayers' organizations—aimed at legislators who voted to increase taxes—will probably be carried out on a broad front.

Two-thirds of the contests, according to present indications, will be decided at the primary election on August 27, with the successful candidates grabbing both major party nominations. The others will go to the polls for the second time in November, fighting to avoid being overshadowed by the main-event presidential combat.

CHAPTER XIII

The checkerboard of the little streets and the long, wavering pale lines that were the beach and the surf fell away below. The world, only a map now, wheeled and shifted: the plane settled to a steady droning flight through silver space.

Her thoughts wheeled and circled, too; she was planning busily. Her great adventure was almost over; it had been a time of shame and pain and anger, and yet Sheila knew that she was emerging from it richer by far than the girl of a few weeks ago.

Ma's life was richer, with this new friend to help her. Joe had a job, and in Frank Mc Cann he had a valuable new friend, too. The Carscaddens might be moving to wider horizons, to new ideals, in a few weeks more. And however grieved Mrs. Mc Cann might be at Gertrude's disappointment, and at the publicity that had suddenly dragged a respectable family into the limelight, at least she had been very kind to Sheila, and Sheila hoped that after quiet weeks—months—of a return to normal conditions, she might think of Sheila Carscadden with friendliness and liking again.

But more than all this, more than the excitement and change and surprise for which Sheila and Angela had so often prayed, Sheila knew that there was deeper gain. Her own soul had been racked and stretched and stimulated into new growth. At twenty-one she could not analyze all this, yet she was conscious of new wings beneath her spirit, and new courage to face the days that were ahead.

She would go home and begin to live on lines completely different from the old haphazard ways of the past. There should be dignity under teasing and innuendo, there should be loving service quietly and simply rendered. Dishwashing should be ennobled, and Sheila would brush her hair a hundred times every night, and rise in time for a bath every morning. And as for reading—

"Oh, I love it to slide like this!" she shouted to Frank, as the deafening throbbing of the engine gave way to stillness, and the plane interrupted her musing with a graceful forward gliding, like a gull.

And instantly the line between unthinking safety and desperate need to save life—just life—was bridged, and Sheila's throat was thickened and her heart stood still. She saw the world rush up at them, the fields with lines of black trees on snow, the long gray and white curve of surf. She clutched Frank, as they both instinctively struggled in their seats, and buried her face in his shoulder.

Then there was a rending sound of wood, and metal shrieking, and herself shrieking. And then two long, droning moans, with her eyes shut, and pain like a fire at her shoulder.

"Look how her arm's twisted under."

Then blackness.

After a long while and a dead silence, someone said conversationally, "You're all right now, aren't you, dear?" and Sheila answered politely, "I'm fine, thank you. Except my head was sort of buzzing—"

"Straighten the poor thing out a little," some woman said compassionately; "look how her arm's twisted under!"

"Better leave things like they are until the ambulance gets here," a man's voice demurred.

Sheila did not know they were speaking of her until someone began gingerly to raise her shoulders. It felt more comfortable, and she said feebly, "Thanks."

"Her mouth's all blood, she's burst a blood vessel," the first speaker said in a whisper.

There seemed to be a good many persons murmuring and moving about. Sheila was conscious of no interest, much less concern, in what was going on. Consciousness waned, strengthened, waned again. She heard a jumble of words.

"He's took up his last plane!" someone said solemnly. And a chorus agreed. "That's right. He's done for."

Then there was the gong-gong-gong of a car, and a siren going "Who-oo-oo-ee!" like a great bird sweeping through the world.

"Sick—" Sheila said apologetically, fearing she was going to be actively ill. But the horrible sensation faded again, and all consciousness faded with it.

Voices presently came back:

"His head's smashed. He's done for, poor fellow! He hasn't moved. Ah—God pity him—"

"My arm is broken, Officer, and I've twisted my ankle."

This was Frank Mc Cann's definite voice speaking over pain, speaking slowly. "I'm anxious about the young girl there," he said. "I tried to get her. I fainted, I think."

"Where did you come from—Atlantic City?" an official voice inquired.

"He's a goner, all right, Sergeant," some man muttered in a low tone, and another added, in a deeper voice, "Too late here, Van."

"Lift that off him—" There was a bustle, a flurry; watchers said, "Ah-h-h!"

Sheila opened one eye. A rush of vertigo overwhelmed her. Pain flashed over her head like the strands of a net. She saw big dim figures, black against the sunshine, and shut her eyes again.

Presently she said, "Frank!"

"Right here, Sheila!" he said. "How—how are you?"

"I wouldn't try to move if I were you," a voice said respectfully. "The ambulance'll be here in a couple of minutes."

"Give me a hand there, will you?" Frank had somehow dragged himself next to her. They were in a sort of park, on snow; green benches were within her line of vision.

With a desperate effort Sheila opened both eyes and immediately began to laugh and cry, to hiccup and strangle all at once. She struggled toward something like a sitting posture.

"Get a priest!" someone whispered.

"I'm all right, Frank," Sheila said, carefully, because her mouth was stiff, "except that I think I had a nosebleed, and got knocked out."

"Sheila, Sheila—you're not seriously hurt?"

"I don't think so."

"But tell me—oh, God, my arm!" There was agony in his voice. "You—you're all right, dear!" Frank said shakily.

"We've sent for an ambulance, sir—"

"My shoulder hurts, but I can move it," Sheila said.

"My dear, my dear, your face is all blood!" Frank told her. He laughed brokenly. "Look at us!" he faltered.

He fished out a handkerchief; his handsome, fine handkerchief, beautifully monogrammed. Sheila moved a cramped arm; one of the women gently began to wipe her face.

"Could you wet that somewhere?" the woman said. "Poor girl, she's as conscious as I am myself."

The cold water felt delicious on Sheila's hot face.

"Oh, thank you," she said, as eyes and mouth and nostrils were freed. "That's so much better. We—well, we came down, didn't we?"

"I'll tell the world," the woman who was bending over her said solemnly. "You had a mighty narrow escape."

"The man—that nice-looking aviator—?"

She looked from the woman's face to Frank's. Frank nodded gravely. His rich black hair was uncovered and tumbled, his face streaked with grease and dirt.

"Couldn't we—couldn't the young lady and I be driven straight home? It would be a great accommodation to me," Frank was saying.

"Keep those people back there!" one of the policemen ordered.

"Ah-h-h!" murmured the crowd. Something was being carried away, some motor engine was starting.

"I think your arm is broken, sir," the sergeant said.

"I know darned well it's broken," Frank agreed ruefully, with the laugh of a person in pain.

"It would take you another hour. You wouldn't rather go to the emergency hospital in Newark, and then go on, sir?"

"I'd much rather get home. I don't want my mother alarmed, or the young lady's mother alarmed."

"There may be internal injuries, sir."

"You mean—the young lady?"

"Well, either of you."

"I think she may feel the shock. She'll be much—much better at home," Frank said. "The newspapers will get this—we want to make as little of it as possible—"

"The pilot was killed, sir."

"Oh, that part. No, we can't hush that up. But the less excitement, the fewer reporters—"

"This was a very nice fellow that was here now. Potter, of the Leader. I know him well. He's a Newark man," the officer said.

"Wouldn't you much rather go home, Sheila?"

"Oh, so much rather, Frank! If Ma saw it in the papers she'd die of the shock."

"Here's the ambulance now, Mr. Mc Cann."

"I'll fix it."

Evidently Frank did fix it, for immediately it appeared that they were to be driven straight into the city.

Frank limped toward the big gray car, leaning heavily on the police officer; Sheila found herself strangely shaky, too, and was grateful for the quick, kindly support of the ambulance nurse.

"I wouldn't look over there, dear!" the nurse said, as Sheila's eyes went toward the collapsed plan that lay like a great crippled bird on the soot-speckled snow.

"It makes me feel sick—" Sheila whispered, shuddering.

"I should think it might!" the nurse murmured comfortingly as she helped Sheila into the ambulance.

"Heavens, what a crowd!" Sheila said dizzily.

"Doesn't it just seem as if they come from nowhere?"

Frank half sat, half lay on the extended bed; Sheila could see from the working muscles of his face that he was in pain.

"This'll frighten my mother to death!" Frank said.

"Your little party certainly had a miserable ending!" This was the nurse. Frank did not open his eyes; Sheila said nothing.

The ambulance rumbled along slowly. Sheila's thoughts wove back and forth dreamily. Now that the first horror was over she felt oddly weary and weak. Her shoulder hurt her, and her head ached dully; she was all right, she told herself, no harm had been done, but oh—how good it would be to get home to Mother, to be away from the crowd, and the voices and the questions! She need never see the pantry at the Pendergast again, never take orders from Mr. Benny. In a few hours more she would be safe in the beloved home kitchen, talking to Ma, watching Angela's round eyes pop out of her head with excitement; she would be drinking a cup of tea the way she liked it, reaching to the stove for her toast—

"Isn't it getting dark early?" Frank said, suddenly rousing from the stupor into which he occasionally seemed to lapse.

"It's nearly five, Frank," Sheila said.

"Five!"

"Yes. I just saw a clock."

"These things take time, you know!" the nurse observed soothingly. Sheila, sick and shaken as she was, thought that she must remember that to tell Joe.

The poor pilot, she mused. One minute floating over the gray-white panorama of beach and wintry world, and the next minute just that still form, that trampled depression, in the snow.

"I've been in a terrible accident!" she thought. And then, wearily, "But what haven't I been through in the last few weeks?"

"Does it feel good to be back in New York, Sheila?" Frank said, opening his eyes.

"Oh, does it! I was just thinking. My heart is pumping so, I can hardly breathe."

They were in the city streets; the ambulance bell was ringing steadily now, and Sheila could see the sidewalk crowds eyeing them interestedly as they went through.

"I had them telephone Mother I'd hurt my arm, and to have Doctor Underwood at the house," Frank said. "Well! Not much more of this, eh? We'll be comfortable in no time now, Sheila."

"When on earth could you phone your mother?"

"I had the police sergeant do it, asked him to telephone. Just to say that there'd been a smash and that we were all right, and on our way in. I told him to say that Mother was to use her own judgment about getting in touch with your mother—"

"Ma's probably got the fire department out!" Sheila exclaimed, aghast.

"Well, the poor fellow was killed, Sheila, and you can't avoid a certain amount of interest in that."

"To be in an airplane smash—" Sheila murmured, struck afresh with the strangeness and horror of it.

"I took my training at Bellevue," the nurse said, as they stopped at a Broadway artery, "and my first case was a fellow that had come down in a plane." She was diverted. "For goodness' sakes look at the evening papers!" she exclaimed. And, glancing eagerly out at a corner newsboy, she read a headline: "Mystery Girl in Plane Crash!"

For a minute the words meant nothing to Sheila. Then her heart gave a great spring. In the remaining few seconds that they waited at the corner, she leaned forward and saw the front sheet of the paper, the hurried blurred photographs of the group in the park, the plane's great fallen wings, the lifted form of the dead man.

"That's the crash, all right," Miss Sutter said. "It doesn't take long to get things into the papers nowadays, does it? But where do they get that 'mystery girl' stuff? You and—" She glanced at Frank and then at Sheila. "You're his wife, aren't you?" she asked.

"Oh, no. Mr. Mc Cann was just—bringing me home," Sheila said, with a queer, affronted little laugh.

"Oh, I see—" the nurse said, in a peculiar tone, with a quick glance.

"Mr. Mc Cann," Sheila explained, in a low tone, with a wary look at his closed eyelids and unconscious face, "is engaged to be married to a Miss Bernadette Kennedy, of Spuyten Duyvil."

The nurse's young bright eyes were sympathetic.

"You two were trying to get away with something, hey?" she guessed shrewdly, smiling. "I don't mean anything wrong, just—" she paused. "For heaven's sake!" she said.

"I wish I was dead," Sheila said simply. Frank muttered incoherently.

"He'll be all right when he gets his arm set," Miss Sutter said in a whisper. "He's dazed with shock."

"That isn't what's worrying me," Sheila answered, dully. "It's what my mother'll think, and what his people will think—"

"But my good gracious, it isn't your fault if you're in an accident!" the other girl said quickly.

"No, of course not," Sheila admitted, uneasily. "But—but it just seems as if everything had gone crazy!" she lamented.

Frank opened his eyes.

"Don't worry, Sheila," he said, in a deep reassuring voice that still had traces of stupor in it. "I'll take care of you. We're all right!"

The car turned a corner; they were at the Mc Cann house.

"Oh, God protect us!" Sheila said in a whisper. It was a prayer. "Oh, Frank," she said, "look! There's a million people waiting!"

Not a million. But a crowd that framed both sides of the brownstone steps; a crowd that demanded the constant attention of two policemen. Men were pressing forward, women were planted in solid lines; all turned their eyes eagerly to the ambulance as it drew up.

"Frank, I can't go in, I'm going on home—" Sheila stammered, aghast. "I can't—they've a camera there—"

He had pulled himself together, he gripped her hand.

"No," he said, "you've got to go through with it. Your mother may be here. Come on, just walk through—"

The crowd buzzed excitedly, as Sheila and a policeman between them supported the limping man across the sidewalk.

"Narrow escape, Mr. Mc Cann!" one of the policemen said, respectfully.

"I'll tell the world!" Frank answered, with a groan and a smile. The crowd laughed in shocked sympathy.

Sheila looked up. The door of the Mc Cann house opened, a flood of persons poured out; servants, family, and the gray-headed stout man that she was afterward to identify as the family doctor. And with them was Joe Carscadden — Joe! — and while Sheila was stumbling upward to the lighted wide hallway, half dragging Frank with her, and half dragged herself, she saw her mother, majestic in her best dress—

Then they were all crying and milling about madly in the hall. Sheila saw Mrs. Mc Cann, with her face white and tearstained, and she saw the judge, looking somehow old and broken. She caught at his hand.

"Judge, I'm so sorry—" she faltered.

Judge Mc Cann brought his distracted gaze to her face.

"Now, now, Sheila," he said gently, "accidents will happen! And he returned immediately to the business of the moment. "Put your arm around him there, Leo. All right, Mary. Hurting you, son?"

"It's my arm, look out for my arm—" Frank muttered, and the mother's moan was distinguishable above the other moans that suddenly filled the hall.

"My darling, my son—"

"We'll get you right upstairs, Frank; we'll fix you up in five minutes!" the doctor said.

Brothers, sisters, servants, parents, they surged about him. His voice rang out suddenly, as he was being tenderly lifted upstairs.

"Is Sheila there?"

"Right here, son," said his father.

"Sheila, I must see you before you go!"

"Anything, dear'r, anything!" Judge Mc Cann said, faltering, and Sheila heard Frank's effort at a laugh.

"I'm not dying, Pop. I want Doc' Underwood to look at her, that's all. She's done something to her shoulder—"

They were all straggling upstairs; they eddied into a big front bedroom where Mamie was turning down the covers of an immense old-fashioned walnut bed.

"Mother, I'm all right."

"They've broke him completely!" Sheila heard her mother say, in a whisper, and Mrs. Mc Cann said weeping, "Oh, Mrs. Carscadden, how they break your heart on you—the children."

Frank gave another groan as they lowered him against the pillows.

"Poor dear!" his mother, bending over him, said tenderly. She began to pray in a low voice.

"Mother, I'm all right. And the doc' has a lot of dope for me, haven't you, Doc'?"

"I'm going to fix you up right here in the dressing-room, Frank," the old doctor said. "Doctor Russell is on his way from the hospital now. When he gets here we'll give you a shot, put you to sleep."

"Doctor, do you think there may be internal injuries?" The frantic mother again asked. Frank answered:

"Internal injuries, Mother—forget it! I'm fine. Give you a scare, Pop?"

"Good God!"

"We came down," Frank observed briefly.

"It was in the paper, Frank. That's the way Pop saw it."

"In the paper!"

"The late afternoon edition, with pictures, dear."

"They don't lose much time! Lord, I'm sorry!" Frank muttered.

"Ouch!" Sheila exclaimed, on a wearied and desolate echo of a sob. The old doctor, gently exploring her shoulder, apologized sympathetically.

"Go aisy on her," Mrs. Carscadden warned him. Sheila, completely disarmed by the concern in the beloved voice, began to cry bitterly as she slipped her bare, bruised shoulder back into her dress and straightened the tumbled ruffle of white at her neck.

"You had a narrow escape, my dear!" the doctor said, gravely.

"Don't l'ave me again," Mrs. Carscadden said in a whisper. Sheila clung to her, their wet faces touching, her mother's arms about her.

Mrs. Burdett Heath left Thursday of last week for Los Angeles to visit her daughter, Mrs. Bernice Williams. Mrs. Heath had spent several months here with her brother, William S. actual physical sabotage by subversive elements. (Farmers, who have been more subject to acts of sabotage than any other group, have demanded protection of this type for years on end.)

Analyze our educational system to determine where it has failed to inculcate students with an appreciation of American democracy.

And strengthen the laws to eliminate politics and radical domination in SRA. (This is something all major farm organizations have long advocated.)

It is unfortunate, perhaps, that it took the threat of war—and the tragic object lesson overseas—to bring California to a realization of radical infiltration and all that it portends. But it is fortunate, indeed, that the state is finally aroused—and is prepared to deal with the situation.

The "Fifth Column" has made war on California agriculture for many years past. It has made war in the cities too, through radical labor czars, who tied up business and industry—but farmers were the first to fight back and call a spade a spade in doing so. If California is finally awake, however, the days of the "Fifth Column" are numbered!

ing of three pilots for each plane, or a personnel of 150,000. This is the authoritative view of Capt. E. V. Rickenbacker, World War ace and air line president, who, in outlining the vast tasks ahead of this country, points out that the present total of military and civilian pilots now capable of combat service is approximately 8000. Even should airplane manufacturers acquit themselves ably in the next two years, it would still require at least three years to train the number of pilots needed to man the new air fleet. In other words, the country must not look for miracles over night or even within a year. It takes time to build a giant armaments program. But geographically favored as she is, America should have the time to complete it, in safety.

Kidnaped Soldiers

The Russian bear has been growling angrily these last few days at little Lithuania, whom she took "under her protection" last fall. Russian soldiers stationed there, says Robert Bogner who had visited at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bogner, Pollard road, returned Sunday to San Luis Obispo where he is a student at the Polytechnic school.

Moscow, have been "kidnaped." When Red army soldiers first marched into the Baltic state eight months ago, they expressed open-mouthed astonishment at the good food, good clothing, and low prices to be found in that "capitalistic" country. It is possible the kidnapped soldiers have simply deserted instead? At any rate, Lithuania has replied perkily, "If you want the situation clarified, we'll gladly do so!"
